You may want to try a spot of forced marching (use the Latin words sinister and dexter for left and right) or running instead. Quick footwork is very important for a gladiator. You could try getting a pupil to run on the spot (as the trainee gladiator) whilst surrounded just out of arm's length by four classmates.

"You wouldn't want to know" vs "you don't want to know". It is a punchier variant, probably preferred in the US for that reason. 'You don't want to know' is being used to represent 'Even though you have a desire to know as evidenced by your asking the question, if I give you the facts, you'll wish you never asked.' Stick with 'You don't want to know.'
